Working together,
saving water, saving energy

Before receiving the advice from Scottish Water, I would say we weren't as knowledgeable on saving water as we might have been. When you have the knowledge and the understanding you can, quite simply, make a significant difference with small actions. And if multiple people do so, it will make a bigger difference.

The brochure made us really appreciate the water supply we have in Scotland. I received a kitchen tap aerator in my pack, which I think definitely saves water because it gives me the impression that I am using the same amount of water as a normal tap when I'm washing my hands, or rinsing crockery, even when I'm not.

We were unduly wasting water that we didn't need to waste, and we hoped this device would perhaps bring this to our attention, which I believe it did.

I found both the brochure and the kitchen tap aerator useful; their importance was symbiotic as it showed the benefits of why you should save water, so I think they worked well together. The kitchen tap aerator has helped me save energy, and this past year my energy company have reduced my bill by £10 per month. I was very satisfied with the advice I received, and we still have the device on my tap, so we are obviously happy with it.
